Introducing.....

Suzi Finkelstein

Suzi has a valuable blend of experience, bringing together general management, learning and development, and consulting across a number of sectors. She comes from a teaching background where she influenced and created change with curriculum, community engagement and awareness. Future roles enabled her to extend her understanding and skills on educating students and engaging the community to adult learning and development.

Suzi's career fast tracked into management where she managed teams and led projects that sustained organizational change and increased productivity and growth. Much of her work involved developing and delivering learning and development programs for internal and external stakeholders. The success of these programs relied on recruitment, staff management and coaching, team building and relationship management.

She has been contracted to many organisations assisting clients with organisational and cultural change, process management and leadership competencies. Training has covered the management, instructional design, editing and coordination of training projects. Clients have included the corporate, education, government and community sectors.

Training specialties comprise 'train the trainer', diversity awareness and communication skills packages.

Suzi's passion for life-long learning is evident in her delivery of training programs. She has an innate understanding of adult learning needs and ensures all participants feel valued, with expectations exceeded. This is underpinned by her strong presentation and facilitation skills, with a natural flair for engaging her audience.

What's Suzi's LEARNAVORE animal?

Like the dolphin, Suzi enjoys learning in groups and never misses an opportunity to engage and participate in community learning opportunities. Learning happens naturally when people are comfortable and at ease with each other. Suzi facilitates sessions that are engaging, fun and a little 'playful'.
